Emmy Award–Winning Writer Releases Christmas Novelette Told from Heaven's Press Box

MARK! The Herald Angel follows an angelic newspaper reporter covering the birth of Christ — and arrives with a companion storybook, a free family Advent devotional, and an animation adaptation in early development.

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Glenn Fletcher, an Emmy Award–winning writer and family ministry veteran, has released MARK! The Herald Angel, a Christmas novelette published through his independent imprint, Abracadaver Press. The book is available now on Amazon and at MarkTheHerald.com, with church direct-order pricing available for congregational adoption.

The story follows Mark, a small angelic newspaper reporter for the Eternal Herald — Paradise City's journal of record — who is assigned to cover the most significant event in human history: the birth of Jesus Christ. Inspired by the classic carol “Hark! The Herald Angels Sing,” the novelette blends journalistic humor, genuine theological weight, and a sense of wonder that Fletcher says has largely gone missing from Christmas fiction.

“I wanted to give the Christmas story back its sense of impossible scale — and a reporter asking questions felt like exactly the right lens.”

— Glenn Fletcher, author

Fletcher was part of the writing and development team for Auto-B-Good, the animated series that earned five Emmy Awards — and he spent more than 20 years in youth ministry, family ministry, and Christian retail before channeling that experience into the MARK! ecosystem.

The novelette is accompanied by a companion picture storybook for children ages three to seven, and a free 12-day Advent devotional designed for busy families — five minutes per day, one story thread, one scripture, and one question worth asking around the table. All three products are designed to work together as a complete Advent package for individuals, families, and church adoption.

The story's signature cinematic image — in which the earthly world appears frozen and motionless to the angelic characters, while the angels themselves move freely and unnoticed through a paused Bethlehem — is the visual anchor for an animated adaptation currently in early development.

MARK! The Herald Angel is available in print and ebook formats on Amazon and MarkTheHerald.com. Bulk pricing for church orders and free review copies for media and ministry leaders are available directly from the author. The free Advent devotional can be downloaded at MarkTheHerald.com/devotional.
